Karachians or Karachay

(Карачай, Карачайский or Карачей) is a term used in Russia and other states of the former Soviet Union for a group of ethnic Kalmyks of the Karakalpak Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic. History After the retreat of Soviet troops from the area, the Karachays created their own autonomous political-administrative system, with the capital in Shovgen. The Karachays are closely related to the Kumyks of the Kumyk

Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic, and they share the same historical homeland, the southwestern part of the Pamir mountains. The Karachay Republic was part of the Karakalpak ASSR, which was one of the founding members of the Soviet Union. The Karachay ASSR, along with the Kumyks' ASSR, was originally part of the Oirat-Tibetan Soviet Socialist Republic. When the Oirats had a history of conflicts with the Russians and the Tibetans, these conflicts had been resolved in the 1920s. The Karachay Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic was established in 1922, and the Kumyk Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic was established in 1926. Geography

The Karachay Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic covered an area of around 1.2 million square kilometers (over 4,000 mi²). The Karachay ASSR shared its border with the Tajik

SSR, Uzbek SSR and Kyrgyz SSR. Population The Karachays were at one time the second-largest ethnic group in the Karakalpak ASSR after the Kumyks. According to the Russian census of 1989, the Karachay ASSR had a total population of approximately 170,000 (around 62,000 in the capital of Shovgen), including Karachay (68
