Mysteries: The Year of Our Lord 1601 Although I've said plenty on this blog about the what ifs of urban legends, the occult, and otherworldly events, I often like to look back on a year and reflect on what might have happened. Now, not in terms of us sitting around a campfire telling ghost stories, but rather some horrible cataclysm that we might've witnessed just outside of Bordeaux in the summer of 1601. Here's what we may have seen that July day: A war between two city states that had been at war for over a decade: The War of the Worlds. A black comet travelling in a straight line: As above, so below. A bright ball of fire spooking onlookers: The Guépard. A tree in the shape of a head with four arms: the Green Man. Someone getting zapped with a plague-infested herb: This is starting to sound like the modern witch hunt. An earthquake, followed by a terrible scream that resonated deep into the forest: Demonic possession, followed by Black Mass. Some sort of Satanic ritual with horrible results: A ten-year drought that's been kept in check by a comet. A corpse with five bullet holes: A Freemason test of one's faith. Wait, there's more! The Three Brethren of Salem: A group of carpenter and blacksmiths who got ostracized for working on a Plymouth colony ship that sank at sea. Or, it could have been quite different, and this year has lots of cultists, necromancers, and the occasional priest getting stoned while ba244e880a
