. . . . This might come as a surprise, as their efforts are always accompanied by a soundtrack of fantastical orchestral numbers that sound like they're from Star Wars. . . . . The third single, “The Devil Is In Me,” is another spooky song that seems to be begging the question, “Who is the devil and what did he do with those two?” This song will remind you of that stereotypical old school horror movie theme that sounds like it's going to be in the next Wayne's World. It's actually quite catchy, but the biggest thing about this song is its chorus. The chorus is a moving lament, like those found in the works of John Mellencamp, Bob Dylan, and a few other greats. And it's sung by the two women, with the chorus in the first person and lamenting, “There's a devil in me, and you know what he's gonna do.” Download or stream . . . . Featuring Enya, “The Serpent, The Rainbow” continues to be a monster hit. A possible . . . . In addition, there is a collection of scary themed tracks, including “Devil’s Breath” and “The Forest Of Chills.” With “Devil’s Breath,” I find it most fitting to call it a reinterpretation of the song “Devil’s Desserts.” It is darkly humorous and becomes less humorous as it goes on, but it does make for a fun listen. . . . . “The Forest Of Chills” makes the list for a variety of reasons. First, it’s a brilliant composition, but it also incorporates the sounds of what sounds like a haunted house. I find it a very spine tingling track. There is something really haunting about the percussion. I also find the song very catchy, and it does fit well with the rest of the film. . . . . I’m a huge fan of Enya, so it’s easy for me to recommend her to anyone. I can’t get enough of her work. “The Serpent, The Rainbow” seems to be the biggest hit in the collection and it is also one of the best tracks
