Circulating tumor cells (CTC) in blood may be evaluated in the clinical setting using the CellSearch(R) system or the negative enrichment technique by magnetic activated cell sorting (MACS) or fluorescence activated cell sorting (FACS). Using blinded samples collected from patients with prostate cancer, the CellSearch(R) system or the two MACS and FACS techniques were compared for enumeration of CTC. The CellSearch(R) system identified only 1 of 10 samples with CTC; the other 9 samples were negative. The two MACS and FACS techniques identified 4 and 8 of 10 samples with CTC, respectively. In individual patients, the detected CTC were highly variable and few (3-4) were detected by all three techniques. Only the MACS technique appeared to enrich CTC at specific levels. CTC cannot be identified in all patients with prostate cancer using any of the three techniques studied.[Primary intracranial malignant fibrous histiocytoma: case report]. Malignant fibrous histiocytoma (MFH) is a rare neoplasia. Its appearance as primary intracranial tumor is very rare and there are only a few descriptions in the literature. A patient with a primary intracranial tumor is presented. A 32-year-old female patient was admitted with a history of a rapidly growing and painless mass at the right frontal bone, which was diagnosed as a brain tumor by computerized tomography (CT) and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI). The tumor was treated by surgery and a pathological examination showed a malignant fibrous histiocytoma. No other neoplasia was found at the patient's local examination or by study of the medical history. The patient is still alive 19 months after surgery./**
