You can watch live weather conditions, store your favorite locations and update them in just seconds, run a range of holiday forecasts and much more! This article explains the process of running TimeScape an utility, which is used for accurately calculating the time and date within an Access file. This article is not applicable for any version of Access later than 2003 or Access for Vista or Windows Server 2008. TimeScape is an Access 2003 utility that has the ability to accurately calculate the time and date within an Access file. It calculates the time and date for a User Defined Date Format within the Access file that can be changed at any time. TimeScape analyzes the user's date and time format and converts it to the Access Date and Time format (AM or PM) and then calculates the Time and Date for the converted date. If the date and time is in the wrong format it attempts to convert it to the right one. New Features: TimeScape has a new user interface that shows the current date and time in the top right of the screen, displays the new user date/time format and the user's current date and time in the top left of the screen. There is now a new option that allows you to adjust the Access AM/PM Format of the user date. This is now called: Date/Time Format. Several fixes to all existing functions/features. TimeScape is tested to work with Access 2000, 2000 Pro, 2000 Sp1, 2000 Pro
