Choosing a course: Use the offerings listed in the "Where to Find Photoshop CS5" sidebar to figure out what's available. Shooting an image: Experience people before you start—you don't want to catch them on camera looking at their cell phones or on a computer. So, perhaps have a camera in your hands. Picking a time: Photoshop works best with an open mind. So, it's best to be in that mindset when you start the shoot. Deciding on the right program: If you're shooting digital files or DSLRs, use Adobe Photoshop CS5, whether you intend to take advantage of its powerful features or not. This guide will help you select and use Photoshop CS5. Finding Photoshop CS5: Just as you can find apps for your phones, you can find Photoshop for your computer. The version of Photoshop we recommend is listed in the "Where to Find Photoshop CS5" sidebar. Q: puppet apply being slow (beyond the timeout) I have run into a problem today after using puppet to create a new host with a bunch of packages, and then trying to kick off some automated configs in a while loop. It takes about an hour and a half to apply puppet to a new host and then run the configs over the top of the changes. I suspect this is because of the way I have configured the manifests. Firstly, I use hiera to pull in some configs from a common file. For example: class puppet::agent { # For hostconfig: include hiera hiera_include({'/etc/hosts': file =>

'/etc/hosts', path => 'hiera.yaml', require => Package['puppetlabs-vmagent'], }) # For other configs: include hiera hiera_include({'common_release': path => 'hiera.yaml', require => Package['common_release'], }) # etc...

So this part is working fine. It also pulls in all of the provisioners that puppet uses to generate the manifests, most of which I use from specific files in hiera as well. Again, that works fine. But once I start moving on to the manifest itself, things get weird. I have a bunch of different hiera directives to pull in templates, which all work fine when I run them individually with Puppet. For example: class puppet::agent {

  hiera_include('common_release') class { 'common_release': release =>
    $common_release, } }

When I run this puppet apply, it will actually apply changes fine, but it is really slow. Here is an example. [root@someapp ~]# puppet agent -t

Q: How to stop a link relapsing with jquery I have a simple div with a href as below. This is where I am As you can see I am linking to an anchor on the same page, at the moment it is a fixed anchor link (looks like this #). I have a class that when clicked on then makes the div drop down. The problem is that this link is still active and once clicked on, it pops open in a new tab. How can I prevent this? My jQuery that is currently making this work is below.

$(document).ready(function () { $(".content-link").click(function () { $("#content-link").css("display", "block"); $("#content-link").animate({opacity:0.9}, 3000, function () { $(".content-link").css({opacity:0}); }); $(".content-link").animate({height:142}, 3000, function () { $(".content-link").css({height:142}); }); }); }); A: Add return false; at the end of your

System Requirements:

After installing, you will first need to start the game, and go to the following location: `/users/your_username/appdata/local/psp_game_support_en/rpesside_patched` You will then need to extract the `ps1-edit-rar` package. The package needs to be extracted to your PSP's internal storage, so you can't just copy the rar file anywhere on your hard drive. If your PSP is connected to your computer while installing, you will need to make sure that it's not connected to
