If you find yourself thinking, "Gee, I wish I could edit a photo like this," or "Man, I wish I could use this powerful tool to create this cool-looking design," then this guide is for you. Getting Started 1. Create a new blank document in Photoshop. Choose File > New or Ctrl-N to create a new file. If you're creating a new project, Photoshop will create a new project folder for you, even if the size of the document you choose isn't large enough to fill up the standard size that comes with Photoshop (about 50,000 x 30,000 pixels). You can work with any size you like. Before you begin, take a few minutes to browse online to find a picture or image you'd like to use. Once you've found a picture, open it in Photoshop and save it to your local hard drive. If you don't have a picture, you can create a document to use. Using a blank document is fine as well. To use Photoshop, you'll need to install it on your computer. If you don't currently have Photoshop on your computer, you can download a free, fully functional version. You can also download a trial version of Photoshop to give it a try before you purchase the full version. Or, you can open your web browser, go to the Adobe Photoshop page, and download it directly through the browser. After downloading, you can install Photoshop on your PC and then move it into your applications folder or on your desktop. If you don't have access to a computer with Photoshop, you can download and install the free trial version. Once you have Photoshop open on your computer, you'll need to add it to your computer's path. You'll need to learn how to do this on your own, but it's not difficult. It will be easier if you use a Windows computer, but you can do it on any operating system. To add the program to your computer's path, you'll need to go to File > Preferences

Step 1: Your image, Photoshop Elements Open your image in the program and choose File > Open. Browse to the location of your image and choose it. The image should open in a new tab. After you've opened your file, you'll need to select the correct file type. Usually, Photoshop Elements will attempt to guess what type of file you're working with, but this doesn't always do the job. When the program guesses at your image's file type, it will try to name the file based on its size, resolution or color depth. If you're not sure of the file type, it's generally safe to click OK and let Photoshop Elements figure things out for you. You can also change the image's file type by selecting it in the bottom left and clicking the File Type dropdown menu. Choose the type your image is and click OK. When you're finished with the image, you can view it, do basic edits, save it as a new image or open a different file type to work on. Note: Open your files in a new window to avoid losing work if your image ever explodes. Step 2: Your image, Photoshop Elements In this tutorial we'll show you how to remove that moustache from your man's face. First, let's make a duplicate of your image. Drag the image onto the Create a copy tool in the top left corner of the image window. Then, in the top right corner of the image window, hold down the Ctrl key and click the Eyedropper icon to select the color you want to use in the area we're removing. Set the color to the color you want the moustache to disappear as shown in the image below. When you're done, Ctrl+Z to undo. Step 3: The Heavy Lifting: Remove Moustache with the Clone Stamp Tool Next, we'll use the Clone Stamp tool to remove the moustache from the man. Make sure you have the feathered setting at 100% and the Hard Light blend mode. Move the Clone Stamp Tool over the area you want to remove. Click and drag the tool downwards to remove the moustache. To leave some of the details of the moustache intact, click the Stroke at 100% button in the bottom left corner to merge the parts of the moustache that you don't want to remove. 05a79cecff

Q: Gmail "too many imap connections in progress" I'm using only IMAP and not POP3, and every time I restart my computer, Gmail always shows this "too many IMAP connections in progress", and I have to reconnect to Gmail to make it work. Any suggestion? A: This is due to the cyrus imap client having an open instance that is still in the listen mode. You can check using the imap service --status command. It can be caused by programs trying to register with the imap server without finishing their previous registration which causes two instances open. You can temporarily stop the imapd process by doing: killall -9 imapd stop imapd /etc/init.d/imapd stop and then start with: /etc/init.d/imapd start The imapd process will start listening for connections and that will free up the connection. IMAP I have noticed imap connections to google mail on the newsgroup is typically around 5 or 6 connections in 30 or so days of steady use with minimal activity, and I try not to exceed 8 imap connections at any time. I did notice that having more than 8 connections slow the imap response times. I currently have 16 connections open. -- To clean out the existing connections do something like this: telnet mx.google.com 993 login user mail mail control L2U mail control LOG0 quit quit This will remove old connections from the existing cyrus imapd process. -- The imapd daemon can also start multiple processes under certain circumstances, such as when two programs with the same name are installed. Try: find / -name imapd The output of the above command will show the places to look for where the daemon is installed. I usually just use /etc/init.d/... as that is the default location. This example will find the /etc/init.d/imapd. From there type: chkconfig --list imapd To start the imapd process. To stop the imapd process type: chkconfig --list imapd To stop it completely use: systemctl --abort --system imapd --

Both had sudden onset of focal neurologic deficit, followed by recanalization of the occluded blood vessels on imaging studies.
